This models a two-node network and shows how clock drift is corrected by ADV packet in OpenWSN network. Using root as a reference point, the node has a clock drift of 10^-4 (we pick this exacerbated value for demonstration). Since OpenWSN detects synchronization loss through a counter deSyncTimeout, this happens when the ASN is around 334. After that tick, you will see the time synchronization.

• initialAddress: 0

Authors: Antonio Iannopollo, Ben Zhang

